An unhealthy climate?
The public health implications of climate change

The CIEH is organising a conference to highlight the public health impacts of climate change. While the media and government have tended to focus on the physical impacts of climate change like flooding and droughts, this conference will bring together a wide array of speakers to address and examine the health implications of climate change.

Are people working in public health services prepared? Was the death of thousands of elderly people in France during the heat wave of 2003 a wake up call to governments across the developed world? What strategies should we develop and plan?

Conference aim
To bring together senior figures in public health to discuss future strategies and solutions.

Who should attend?
- Directors and senior managers of public health and environmental health services
- Government departments and agencies responsible for public health
- Local authority cabinet members for environmental health
- Senior managers in business and commerce

Conference programme
The conference will address the following issues:
- Policy frameworks to mitigate the public health impacts of climate change
- Tackling the major challenges and dilemmas facing Government, the public health profession and business
- Securing a safe food supply
- The threat from climate sensitive pest borne diseases
- The role of public health practitioners in adapting to climate change

Confirmed speakers
Professor Ian Lowe, Emeritus Professor, Griffith University
Professor Tim Lang, Professor of Food Policy, City University
Dr David Pencheon, Director of the NHS Sustainable Development Unit (SDU)
Justin McCracken, Chief Executive, Health Protection Agency
Dame Deirdre Hutton, Chair, Food Standards Agency
Paul Kelly, Director of Corporate Affairs, ASDA

Conference dinner
A formal dinner for speakers and delegates will be held on Wednesday 19 November at 15Hatfields – the CIEH’s newly refurbished conferences and events venue. Places for dinner are limited and available on a first come first served basis.

To book a place on this event complete and return the form overleaf or book online at www.cieh.org
